Cat fleas can be a real pain to deal with, both for cats, and cat parents. Fleas on cats are a common health concern, but one that should still be treated as quickly as possible for your cat's long-term health and comfort.

Cat fleas are little brown blood-sucking parasites which are small, fairly flat, and have long legs to jump. They move quickly but cannot fly, and are around 2mm long. They tend to be found around certain warmer areas of your pet, such as their neck and armpits, and can cause itching and irritation when they bite.

In this article, we'll answer the key question of: what do fleas look like on cats? We'll take a closer look at cat fleas, how pets can pick up fleas, and how you can identify what a cat flea looks like in order to get rid of them fast, to keep your pet as comfortable and healthy as possible. We'll cover:

What are fleas?

The most common type of fleas are cat fleas, otherwise known by their scientific name Ctenocephalides felis. If you're wondering: what does a cat flea look like? Fleas on cats look like dark brown insects with flat-surfaced bodies and 3 pairs of legs. They are very small, ranging between 1-3 mm in length, making them difficult to detect.

Flea eggs are tiny, no more than 0.5 mm in size, and look like tiny grains of white rice or flakes of salt on your cat's skin and fur. They can be mistaken for dandruff, but the eggs are non-sticky and oval-shaped, and can easily fall from your pet to your furnishings to hatch out in the house.

While you may spot a live cat flea on your cat's fur, you're more likely to notice flea dirt. Cat flea dirt looks like small dark specks, which are actually the flea's faeces. This is usually evidence that your cat has got fleas.

You can tell if your cat has fleas by checking around their groin area, under their armpits, behind their neck, shoulder and legs, and around the base of their tail. These are all humid areas where fleas thrive best and are therefore where they will usually bite.

Identifying the evidence: Fleas vs. eggs vs. dirt

You may wonder: what do fleas look like on cats, and how can you tell them apart from dirt, flea eggs on cats, or even dandruff? Although fleas can typically be difficult to see in your pet's fur, as they move so quickly, you may find it easier to look for the flea dirt.

Feature	Appearance	Size	Location
Adult cat fleas	Small brown insects with six legs	1-3mm	Commonly around the neck, base of the tail, tummy, armpits and behind the ears
Flea eggs	Tiny white oval shapes (like granules of salt)	0.5mm	Deep in cat fur, as above
Flea dirt	Specs of brown (like pepper)	0.5mm	Can be all over, but particularly in warm spots

Some people may wonder what a cat flea looks like when it's fully grown, versus flea eggs on cats, but the two look quite different. Fleas are small brown insects, whereas the eggs are white, uniformly shaped, oval blobs which don't stick to fur. Dandruff is more likely to be irregular in shape, accompanied by dry skin, and this will cling to your pet's fur.

It's important to observe your pet for other signs, such as bite marks on their skin and scratching, and you may notice fleas themselves or small bite marks on your ankles and other areas of your skin so that you can start prompt treatment.

Identifying cat fleas: Understanding the life cycle

Before you think about how to get rid of fleas on cats, it's important to understand a little bit about the issue.

Fleas are tenacious insects specially adapted to leaping from one animal to another and making themselves comfortable on their new host. This makes fleas on cats one of the most common health issues cat parents have to worry about. A single female flea can lay an incredible 50 eggs per day once they're settled in your cat's fur, potentially making the issue a lot worse in a short space of time.

Some common ways that cats can pick up fleas include:

- Outdoor cat:

Allowing your cat outdoors means they're more likely to encounter fleas. Sources of fleas include the garden, other flea-infested areas, or interactions with wild animals.

- Other animals:

Cats may catch fleas from hunting mice and birds or from contact with other infested animals. If you have other pets in the house, such as rabbits or dogs, then your cat could get fleas from them.

- Irregular treatments:

If you're not keeping up with your cat's preventive flea treatments, they lack the defences to manage flea infestations. There are a variety of flea treatments available and it's essential to treat your cat regularly for it to be effective.

- New home:

Whilst your new home may look perfectly clean, there is always the chance there are hidden fleas around. If you've recently moved and you notice your cat with flea symptoms, make sure to clean your new home thoroughly. If the problem persists, contact your local flea control to help.

Wherever your cat happens to pick up their unwanted hitchhikers, it's important to find out how to get rid of fleas on cats fast to reduce the chance of further health problems.

How to spot fleas on cats: 6 signs of infestation

Knowing what fleas look like on cats, and how to identify them, is the first step towards knowing how bad of a problem you're facing and the right way to approach treatment.

Here are some of the common signs to look out for if you're worried you may need to think about how to get rid of fleas on cats.

1. Constant scratching and biting

Similar to head lice in humans, one of the common signs of fleas on cats is excessive scratching in response to the irritation from their bites. Cats may also nibble a particular part of their fur excessively in reaction to fleas.

2. Overgrooming

Cats love to groom themselves, so sometimes it can be hard to tell when they're doing it more than usual. If you notice your cat constantly overgrooming one area of themselves, this could be a sign that they have fleas.

3. Irritability

Cats with fleas are constantly dealing with itches that they can never seem to scratch. Naturally, this will make a lot of cats behave more irritable than usual.

4. Bumps and scabs

Flea bites look like red scabs on your cat's skin, caused by your cat scratching the bite area and making it sore. Your cat may be particularly sensitive to flea saliva if the area of skin becomes inflamed - a sign that your cat has got flea allergy dermatitis - and your cat will need to see a vet for treatment.

5. Anaemia

In some severe cases of a flea infestation, cats can show signs of anaemia such as a decreased appetite, pale gums, weakness and lethargy. This is most common in kittens and senior cats, as their bodies struggle to cope with the loss of blood if there are lots of fleas feeding on them. Learning how to get rid of fleas on kittens safely can help your pet stay healthy and enable them to thrive.

6. Flea dirt

Flea faeces, commonly called “flea dirt”, will appear as dark specks in your cat’s fur that can be visible by parting their fur and checking close to the skin and also after brushing your cat or treating them with a flea comb.

To check if the debris in your cat's coat is flea dirt, simply dampen a piece of cotton wool and place some of the dirt on it, if red seeps out of the 'dirt' it is flea faeces made up of digested blood.

Remember that some of the common flea symptoms in cats can be the sign of other, unrelated health issues. You can reduce the risk of illness in your cat with nutritionally balanced food like Perfect Fit™ Junior Cat Food.

Effective treatments: How to get rid of fleas on cats fast

Topical treatments like Spot On are the most effective way to get rid of fleas on cats. This is designed to be absorbed into your cat’s skin to kill the fleas that ingest your cat’s blood. It also prevents new flea eggs from developing. Speak to your vet practice to understand the products they advise you to use.

Here are some other treatments you may want to check out if you’re wondering how to get rid of fleas on cats fast, how often you should flea a cat, or anything else related to cat fleas.

Flea collars

Flea collars are made with chemicals that repel fleas and provide ongoing protection against fleas. These are less effective than spot-on treatments.

Oral flea treatments

Certain oral medications prescribed by a vet circulate through a cat’s blood and kill fleas that attempt to bite them.

Flea shampoos

Though your cat may not love them, flea shampoos are formulated to kill fleas on contact and can be an effective method to treat an infested cat. However, it's important to consider other options first, as bathing cats is not usually recommended, and flea shampoos are much less effective than spot-on treatments.

Flea combs

Combs can be used in conjunction with other treatments to remove fleas from the fur physically.

Wash fabrics above 60 degrees celsius

Fleas jump off cats and can settle into their bedding or your clothes, sofas and other soft furnishings. Throw all possibly affected items into a bin bag, and place them into your washing machine to wash on a 60+ degree cycle to kill any fleas.

Hoover the house thoroughly

Fleas tend to live in the environment, and only jump onto your cat to feed. They will lay eggs anywhere - from your carpets or the crevices of your floor to items of furniture and particularly in bedding. It's essential to Hoover the whole house thoroughly and repeatedly to ensure no fleas are remaining. Afterwards, empty out your Hoover and wash its waste compartment with warm, soapy water.

Call in an expert

If you've carried out the above steps and fleas are still a problem, you might need to call in flea control to help. There are flea sprays you can use on your carpets and soft furnishings to kill persistent fleas, but it's essential that everybody in the house stays away until surfaces are dry. Always follow the manufacturer's instructions for all products used to treat fleas.

How to prevent your cat from getting fleas?

Like many health issues, it's important to think about how you can prevent your cat from getting fleas just as much as how often you should flea a cat.

Here are some preventative measures to help reduce your cat's risk of fleas.

Grooming regularly

Regular grooming keeps your cat looking glossy and helps to prevent flea infestations. It can also help you spot the signs of fleas and flea eggs on cats before they start to cause problems for your pet.

Maintaining a clean environment

Regularly vacuuming your cat's bedding, furniture, carpets, and other fabrics in the home can kill fleas and their eggs, reducing the risk of your cat getting infested.

Keeping outdoor spaces tidy

If you let your cat outdoors, be sure to trim grass and other vegetation where fleas might be lurking. Read our guide on allowing your cat outdoors for more advice on letting your cats explore safely.

Using preventatives

Your vet might recommend using preventatives to prevent flea infestations in the future.

Maintaining a balanced diet

Fleas are attracted to unhealthy coats and skin. With this in mind, providing the optimal nutrition for a cat's unique needs is another important step in preventing fleas on cats, as maintaining healthy skin and coats will support their overall wellbeing.

When to consult a veterinarian about fleas on cats?

While over-the-counter flea treatments can be effective if you suspect your cat has fleas, it's essential to see a vet as soon as possible for an accurate diagnosis and an effective treatment plan.

When your cat is exhibiting flea symptoms, your vet will be able to advise you on the best course of treatment on how often you should flea a cat.

Fleas are something that many cat parents have to deal with at some point, but knowing what to look out for and the treatment options available can help you take the right preventative steps and keep your cat as comfortable as possible.

- How to Get Rid of Fleas on Cats? Essential Guide

1. What kills fleas on cats instantly?

The quickest way to kill fleas is to administer topical preparation or medication from your vet, which can kill cat fleas within minutes and prevent fleas from laying eggs. Always consult your vet for the best treatment for your cat specifically.

2. Are cat fleas visible to the human eye?

Although cat fleas are very small insects, between 1-3 mm, they are still visible to the human eye. You can check if your cat has fleas by using a flea comb to pull out any adult fleas. Supporting this with a topical treatment is essential, as fleas and their eggs can easily be missed.

3. Can humans get fleas from cats?

Humans cannot catch fleas from cats, although they can still be affected by them. Cat fleas will often bite on your lower legs, especially around the ankles. However, they do not settle in human hair the same way they do in cat fur.

4. What can be mistaken for fleas on cats?

Cat fleas can sometimes be mistaken for mud, dandruff, or other parasites, such as ticks, but they're small, brown, and move quickly. Flea eggs can sometimes resemble flaky skin or dust, but they're uniform and won't stick to cat fur like dandruff will. Flea dirt, when put on a paper towel, dissolves into a red-brown stain when water is dropped on it, unlike soil or other mud.

5. Do I need to treat my house if my cat has fleas?

Yes, you'll need to treat your home if your pet has fleas. The eggs and larvae can live in soft furnishings -, such as carpets, sofas and bedding - so you'll need to thoroughly vacuum throughout the house and put throws, pillows and bedding in the wash. Treat the areas with a pet-safe flea treatment, and repeat as needed to prevent reinfestation.
